

braced the gospel
years later they n Ill., and joined the church. On the w place the Saints w companies for cr
They reached S
3, 1850, and t
Provo.

John D
York, N to H pa

HICKEN BROTHERS.

Butcher Shop.

This shop was established by Clotworthy and Crook in 1891. The following year the Hicken brothers bought out the interest of Mr. Crook and the business continued under the firm name of Clotworthy and Hicken until 1898, when Thomas Clotworthy closed out to his partners, John and Addison Hicken. They have always received the major part of the trade of the town although they have had many competitors. A shop would be started and run for a time, but for some reason it would suspend operations. Later another firm would start up but the Hicken Brothers have had no neighbor butchers to stay with it any great length of time.

They have tried hard to keep up with the times by getting machinery and other conveniences to meet the demands of their customers and the patronage they have received is an assurance that the people appreciate their efforts. During the present season they have added a free delivery and put in a telephone for the benefit of their customers. Their beef, pork, mutton and veal are too well known to need mention further than to say that they are always the best that the market affords. They carry only the best brands of cured meats and lard and are willing to stand by the verdict of the housewives as to their quality.

They attribute their success to honest dealing and fair and courteous treatment to all.

Hicken Bros. Meat Market, one of the early Heber businesses, is shown here with John H. Hicken the proprietor; at the left, Mont Hicken, Thelma Ohlwiler Wootton, Elthoria Hicken Halverson and Phyllis McMillan O'Toole. The picture was taken about 1908.